CANADIAN HOCKEY LEAGUE

The Canadian Hockey League is an umbrella organization that represents the three Canadian-based Major Junior ice hockey leagues for players 16 to 20 years of age.

The CHL was founded in 1975 as the Canadian Major Junior Hockey League and is composed of its three member leagues, the Ontario Hockey League, Quebec Major Junior Hockey League and Western Hockey League. Despite the league's name, its three leagues and 60 teams represent five American states as well as nine Canadian provinces.

The CHL schedule culminates in the Memorial Cup tournament, which sees each of the three league champions, as well as a host team, play a round-robin tournament to determine a national champion.

The CHL also hosts the CHL Top Prospects Game, for the top draft eligible players in the league, as well as the ADT Canada-Russia Challenge, a six-game all-star exhibition series against a team of Russian juniors.

ONTARIO HOCKEY LEAGUE

A member league of the Canadian Hockey League, the Ontario Hockey League currently has 20 member teams - 17 are based in Ontario, 2 in Michigan and 1 in Pennsylvania.

The 20 OHL clubs play a 68 game regular season schedule, which starts in the third full week of September, running until the third week of March.

The OHL playoffs consist of the top 16 teams in the league, 8 from each conference. The teams play a best-of-7 game series, and the winner of each series advances to the next round. The final two teams eventually compete for the J. Ross Robertson Cup and a berth in the CHL Memorial Cup tournament.
